OPINION: Ben Leo revealed that Just Stop Oil are making a comeback

Now, I was getting pretty bored of the juvenile antics at the altar of climate change.

We've seen it all vandals throwing soup over priceless artworks in galleries, defacing Stonehenge, ambushing theatre productions in the West End, blocking traffic, scaling motorway gantries, dousing private jets in paint, and even disrupting sports events all just to spoil the fun for everyone else.

Remember them? They said they were disbanding after the government appeared to adopt their demand to end new oil and gas licences in Britain. Their actions, of course, cost the public tens of millions in police and court time.

But despite Ed Miliband bowing to their demands, I can exclusively reveal that Just Stop Oil is plotting a very big comeback.

On Ben Leo Tonight, we have gained access to secret Just Stop Oil meetings, where members are discussing a dramatic U-turn—planning to cause chaos across Britain by sabotaging Tesla vehicles, picketing petrol stations, and even carrying out "citizens' arrests" on so-called climate criminals.

Speaking during an online meeting on Thursday night, one coordinator—known only as "Dave"—said protests should remain "action-based" and warned against becoming more peaceful, like Greenpeace.

The meeting continued with Dave insisting that it was essential to keep doing what he called the "spicy and naughty stuff" to generate media attention.

The group also discussed how to feed new protest ideas back to what they referred to as a "core team". There was frustration over communication with this mysterious leadership group, with some suggesting using 50-word briefs to make it easier for them to process ideas.

It raises serious questions: Who exactly is this core team? Who are these professional protesters reporting to—and who's funding them?

Chillingly, the group also spoke about carrying out citizen's arrests on so-called climate deniers. There was some introspection as well, with members questioning whether their public image was doing more harm than good.

But ultimately, the overwhelming feeling in the group was that direct action must continue. The meeting wrapped up with plans to proceed with Just Stop Oil's revival, including talk of keeping protesters in safe houses to maintain morale.

Let's be clear: what we're dealing with here is a group of climate zealots plotting to commit criminal acts, backed by who knows what kind of funding, and being housed like some kind of eco-mafia.

And speaking of coordination—let's not pretend the climate agenda is a spontaneous grassroots movement. It's organised. It's funded. It's political.

So, who's paying to bus these protesters from London to Stonehenge, to airports, to art galleries and sports stadiums? Who's funding the Just Stop Oil safe houses where these scruffy, self-righteous agitators meticulously plan how to make Britain colder and poorer?

Just Stop Oil protest in London | Just Stop Oil

The police and the government must crack down on Just Stop Oil's plans for criminality before they gain traction again.

The last thing Britain needs is more disruption, more vandalism, and more self-indulgent eco-activism especially when a Labour government is already happily marching to the drumbeat of Net Zero extremism.

We'll be passing our findings to the police.
